

Bud Abbott is shown visiting Woodland's State Theater upon the opening of his Abbott and Costello 1946 film, "The Time of Their Lives"

A horse and wagon are parked opposite the Hotel Woodland. The rustic man and woman in the wagon are not dressed for a parade and the horse is no pony. One imagines a hard-scrabble farm couple come to town via their household's sole mode of transportation

A man plays a guitar to assembled friends and family in a back yard. This, remarkably, is a decade before the folk music revival.

The Sacramento River ferry crossing at Elkhorn (near today's I-5 bridge) is shown with a truck carrying a refrigerator among other items. This photo by Eddy is also part of the small Eddy Collection at the County Archives military base tent city is impressive in its scale and its rigid layout. This is unidentified and undated but a clue is that "San Luis Obispo" is the address stenciled on an ammo box under a bunk in another photo.
